DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This frame house built by Moses G. Robinette consists of six rooms with a fireplace in each room. The large hand hewn logs supporting the building are exposed in the cellar, that is entered from an outside door. The house was constructed of wide boards that reached from the foundation to the ceiling of the second floor (instead of the usual framing of a house). The outside of these boards were covered with lapped boards. The lath was nailed on the inside with square nails and covered with plaster of hair, sand, and lime. The original plaster remains, as well as, the original floors, and woodwork. The rafters consists of rough poles. A metal roof replaced the old wooden shingle one. The windows have the twelve light with wavy glass panes and old shutters with hand-forged hardware. The door has the old iron lock and large keys. It is surrounded with small panes of glass. The rear of the house has both up and down porches. In the kitchen is a sliding door to pass the food through from the summer kitchen.

The old summer kitchen is in the rear of the house built of up and down boards on a ground foundation. The old stone chimney still stands, as well as the old fireplace inside of the summer kitchen.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The rural architect of this farm is different from the surrounding farm houses. It was built by Moses G. Robinette, the son of Capt. George Robinette (Revolutionary Soldier). Moses G. Robinette was born May 17, 1793, died Feb. 1, 1873 - buried in the Green Meadow Cemetery within sight of the house. A descendant of Moses G. Robinette has always owned and lived in the house. Capt. George Robinette willed this land to his son, Moses G. Robinette, in 1831.

This architect and early settlers, the Robinettes, are important in the early history of Flintstone.
